RESEARCH INTERESTS:

My research focuses on the intersections of strategy formulation and renewal, top management teams, and corporate governance. I study strategy as a configuration of resources and capabilities that are uniquely assembled to achieve a purpose. To understand strategy, one must ask how organizations differ in their resources and capabilities. One must also ask how companies differ in ways in which they manage and govern resources. These are at the core of my research. Below I list some of the research questions that fascinate me.

Strategy Formulation and Renewal:

- In building or renewing a firm's set of competencies (internally or via acquisitions), what are different paths that firms follow?
- What are key systems and path dependencies to consider in designing and implementing strategic change and renewal initiatives?
- What are tensions and dynamic interactions among an organization's internal fit, external fit, and evolutionary fit?

Managerial Competencies and Executive Human and Social Capital:

- What makes managers and executive teams competent in their jobs?
- How do configuration and orchestration of dynamic managerial capabilities matter to strategic renewal and firm performance?
- How do CEO's and executives' human capital, social capital, and cognition shape a firm's strategy and dominant logic?

Corporate Governance Effectiveness, Board Capital, and Ownership Structure:

- What constitutes effective board governance?
- What does it take to design an effective board of directors?
- How do board processes affect board governance effectiveness?
- What are synergies and tensions in achieving board independence and strong board capital?

Research context:

I enjoy doing research on corporations and entrepreneurial firms. I have done industry-focused research on firms in medical devices industry, biotechnology industry, professional service firms (law firms), food and beverage industry (conventional and organic food), retail industry, railroad industry, and international social ventures.
